Mr. Smith Says a Mouthful
Can't Go to War Disunited

Our vote for "the man of the hour" goes to Congressman Smith of Virginia. With strikes threatening on the railroads, on the long-distance telephone lines, and in the "captive" coal mines, Mr. Smith told the House Wednesday that while he had always supported the administration's foreign policy he would have to vote against the bill to permit armed merchantmen to sail into combat zones unless action were taken here at home to curb "unruly elements in our midst."

Mr. Smith's warning spread panic in the Capitol Hill. Previously the administration had been assured easy passage of the foreign policy bill. Now there is a revolt of congressmen, particularly those from the South—and the foreign policy of America is threatened by events here at home.

And for very good reason. We can not invite war abroad without peace and a united people here at home. Unless the administration can solve the revolt of labor on the domestic front we had better change our foreign policy at once. Humiliating as this "loss of face" would be it is at least wiser than risking war when our own people are disunited, sullen and avaricious. The example of Europe shows us clearly that for America to engage in war with such conditions existing behind the front would be to invite defeat.

On behalf of the trade unionists it should be made clear that there is some justice on their side; and also, it should be made clear that the government can not suppress the right to strike without threatening the other civil liberties of the people of this republic.

The National Defense effort has brought tremendous wage increases to hundreds of thousands of persons throughout the nation as the government arbitrarily extended the high industrial scale of the Eastern states into non-industrial regions. The net result was to throw the cost of living out of joint for all those persons not directly employed in the National Defense effort.

Also, the cost of living was raised for the union-contract workers who are now threatening to strike—the railroads, the coal-miners and the long-distance telephone operators. They want more money because the tremendous wages paid many new classes of people have reduced their relative earning power, that is, their old contract wages mean less now that groceries and clothes and rent have gone up.

What we are seeing is simply European power politics applied in a class struggle within the United States.

And the seeds were planted by a national administration which, once having advertised itself as the fountain-head of prodigality, now finds prodigality a mean cousin to get rid of—even though the war wolf is snarling at the door.

Perhaps if the government would use more backbone in dealing with the other pressure groups that have spread inflation clear across America it could make a more convincing argument in talking to the union-contract groups who are now demanding parity in wages.

Today's Real Magic

Not so many years ago, the black, greasy, tarlike, thick fluid that was a residue in the coke-making process was simply burned as fuel. No other use could be found for it, but today the same stuff is carefully divided into its rough parts—tar, ammonia and light oils.

From the treated tar come creosote oil, used in the preservation of railroad ties and other wooden objects; pitch, used in roofing, in water-proofing concrete and in the manufacture of briquets and electrodes; naphthalene, employed in making moth balls and in many sorts of plastics; and phenol, used in the manufacture of plastics, such as telephone receivers, radio panels, automobile trimmings, and bottle tops.

The light oils are treated and from them are derived benzol and toluol. Benzol blended with gasoline makes a superior motor fuel. Its solvent qualities make benzol important in the manufacture of paints, varnishes, stains, lacquers and paint and grease removers. Toluol is used in the manufacture of the deadliest of high explosives, T. N. T.

But, even that does not end the list of things that stem from the lumps of black, shiny, bituminous coal, so familiar to everybody. It is the foundation from which spring by various chemical processes exquisite perfumes, indigo and many other more delicate dyes, oil of wintergreen, smelling salts, beads, buttons, artificial silk, linoleum, billiard balls, laughing gas, phonograph records, and spectacle rims. The realm of healing is blessed with still other coal derivatives such as pain killers, including novocain and aspirin, and the new list of batlers against disease germs—sulfanilamide, sulfapyridine and sulfathiazole.

Truly there are veritable miracles being performed in this 20th century and the magicians are the chemists with their test tubes. And chiefly it is beneficent, not black magic. Despite wars and a thousand other evils, man marches on.

The loss, however, is expected to far exceed the $500 mark as the furniture was completely destroyed and was not insured.

Congress May Act to Halt Strike Threats

Cooling Off Period, Bonuses Discussed by Administration

By the Associated Press
With railroad transportation, long distance telephone communications, and the steel companies soft coal and a large war aircraft company threatened with possible strike stoppage high administration officials were reported Thursday to be considering legislation requiring a "cooling off period" before workers could walk out of defense industries.

The measure would also include bonuses to employees based on the cost of living. It was also pointed out by some house members that they would not vote to send American vessels into war zones unless the labor situation at home was cleared up.

Fourteen unions of non-operating employees, representing some 900,000 workers in the railroad industry rejected a recommendation of President Roosevelt's fact-finding board for a settlement of a wage dispute.

The statement did not contain a direct threat of a strike although non-operating employees authorized leaders last September 5 to call one and the five big operating brotherhoods ordered a walkout on December 7.

The threat of Long Distance Telephone Operators walkout Saturday caused Dr. John R. Steelman, U. S. conciliation director to urge the unions involved to postpone action for a week. Union officials said union members would be told on the question.

John J. Moran, president of the United said that news and photos would not be affected.

White House action of some source appeared certain in the coal dispute (CIO) demands for a union shop in the captive coal pits operated by the steel companies.

President Roosevelt invited John L. Lewis, CIO chief, and other union leaders to confer with him Friday. He did not indicate what action he had in mind.

Renewed was the strike at the Bell Aircraft warplane plant where Leo Lemmo, assistant aviation director of the CIO, said the walkout would be called unless the company begin to bargain.

The UAW, claiming 90 per cent of the workers, seeks a 20 cents hourly blanket wage increase and a minimum of 75 cents instead of 50 cents.

Safety Meeting on November 20

Industrial Council Has Good Report for October

The Hope Industrial Council will hold its annual safety meeting at the city hall auditorium, Thursday night, November 20, beginning at 7:30 p. m. At this meeting, moving pictures will be shown by J. S. Henderson, Safety Engineer for the State Department of Labor, emphasizing the necessity for better labor practices in industrial plants; certificates will be awarded to all industrial plants which have operated as much as one month without a lost-time accident, and talks will be made by Safety Engineer Clyde E. Whitte, of the C. Q. M., at the Proving, and others interested in safety.

The CCC Camp will also participate in the meeting this year and have reserved 150 seats as they will come in a body. The workers in all industrial plants in Hope, and at the Proving Ground, will be urged to attend the meeting. The balcony of the auditorium will be reserved for the audience.

They're Safe and Snug in Canadian Camps, But Axis Prisoners Still Insist on Seeking Escape

Military Tradition Demands Return to Action

By MAJOR THOMAS WAYLING
NEA Service Staff Correspondent
OTTAWA. — In sanctuaries safe from the rigors of the war in Russia, safe from the nightmare of Spitfires roaring down to strike their planes, safe from the deadly menace of British destroyers hunting their submarines, thousands of German war prisoners are under safe guard in Canada. They do not have to fear even bombing raids by their own Luftwaffe.

They are in comfortable quarters. They are allowed to wear their own uniforms and they are better fed than they would be in Germany. They are allowed to write their relatives and receive mail, but of course under censorship.

Their comfortable lot is guaranteed under the 1929 Geneva Prisoners of War Convention ratified by the Dominion of Canada in 1932. They are known as Prisoners of War Class 1, to distinguish them from Class 2, who are interned for subversive activities and so forth. There is the third class, refugees from enemy countries, suspected because of their origin and the circumstances surrounding their arrival in Britain. Many of these are later released and many go back to Britain to do non-combatant war work.

The Class 1 prisoners in Canada were sent out from Britain transported under British guard. Arriving on Canadian shores, they are taken over by the Canadian Army, acting as guards and custodians for the Secretary of State who is Custodian of War Prisoners and Enemy Aliens.

Switzerland Is the Protecting Power
Germany holds far more British prisoners than Britain does Germans. As Germany treats her British prisoners on the same basis as Canada (for Britain) treats German prisoners, the captives in Canada have an enviable lot. Their pay goes on, and in every respect their own country treats them as though still on active service.

Germany may be short of clothing but her army is not, and least of all her prisoners of war in other countries. Whether it be propaganda to convince other countries there is no shortage of clothing or whether the German army has a monopoly of the good fabrics is not known, but the uniforms sent over by Germany for the prisoners of war are of first class material and excellent cut, especially for the German officer prisoners.

The guardian angel of the Prisoner of War is the Protecting Power. In this case Switzerland is the protecting power and Swiss representatives visit the camps, make inspections, talk with the prisoners and in every way keep track of their treatment. They report to their own authorities, and thence to Germany, the condition of the prison camps, the food given, the treatment accorded and everything else pertaining to the prisoners' welfare.

Prisoners must conform to the Navy Army and Air regulations of the Canadian Navy, Army and Air Force and follow the service routines in the matter of discipline. They may be disciplined or punished in accordance with these regulations with the exception that no German officer or N. C. O. may be deprived of his rank or reduced in rank. They can wear their rank badges and must salute all higher ranks.

Freedom of religion for war prisoners is strictly observed in Canada, where religious freedom is basic in the constitution.

It is a tenet of the fighting forces that a soldier, sailor or airman taken prisoner must attempt to escape. For this reason the punishment for recaptured prisoners is not severe. The limit is 28 days detention, an army punishment, but an escaping prisoner who does not halt on command may be shot.

Sixty-four German prisoners of war in Canada have thus far attempted to escape. Only one made a clear getaway, the rest were recaptured, or shot in the attempt. Five were killed attempting to escape or resisting arrest when caught.

Canada's registration system by which every person in the country must carry a registration card, has been responsible for many of the recaptures. Guenther Lorentz, a naval officer, was the first man to escape. He dug a tunnel under the fence and got away. He was picked up by a passing motorist and, posing as a Norwegian, hitch-hiked rides as far as Montreal.

Canada had called in many of her veterans of the Great War for various duties in Canada; old-timers now too old for active service overseas, but keen as ever to do their bit.

One of these, on duty at the Victoria Bridge, didn't like the looks of a man who arrived at the toll gate. He asked him for his registration card.

The pedestrian had none, so the old

Warmly clothed against the Canadian winter, prisoners of war in a Dominion internment camp work under the watchful eye of an armed guard.

Canadian guards must keep on the alert at all times. This dagger was discovered hidden in the bed linen of a prisoner of war. It was made from a blunt, dull kitchen knife, stolen from the mess table and honed to razor sharpness on a stone.

Prisoners of war are allowed to pursue their hobbies in Canada's internment camps. Above, in their comfortable quarters, one works at handicraft while his fellow-prisoners read.

Caucasus Oil Fields Is Aim of New Thrust

Nazis Find Going Tough, Suffer Huge Losses on Other Fronts

By the Associated Press
Adolf Hitler's high command said Thursday that German assault troops were storming the fortifications of Kerch, gateway to the Caucasus oil fields, and had already captured several defense points south of the town.

Reuters, British news agency, quoted a Rome radio as announcing that German and Rumania forces had occupied the port which lies on a narrow strait separating the Crimea from the Caucasus mainland.

Dispatches to the Soviet newspaper, Pravda, however, asserted the Red army troops had beaten off German attempts to turn the Russian lines in the Kerch area.

"German attacks were repulsed by a joint effort of land, aircraft and naval forces," Pravda said.

Attack Halted
Russian front line reports said the Germans were equally unsuccessful in fighting near Sevastopol, key Black sea naval base at the southwest tip of the Crimea, and that repeated Nazi tank assaults failed to break through the defenses.

German bombers were pictured by the high command as blasting furiously at Soviet ships which might be used to evacuate Red troops. The Nazi command reported that 3 cruisers, a destroyer and 5 large merchantships were badly damaged in nearby waters.

On the central front Soviet dispatches declared that fierce fighting was raging on both flanks of Moscow, 85 miles northwest of the capital and Tula, 100 miles to the south.

London military quarters reported that the Nazis were apparently girding for a new offensive against Moscow at several points despite enormous losses already suffered in the 42-day-old drive on the capital.

More Than Million Casualties
Authorized London quarters said 15 German armored divisions and 7 infantry divisions—perhaps 1,200,000 troops had suffered casualties and that in some instances Nazi losses were as high as 50 per cent.

Eight Nazi army divisions, withdrawn from the front lines, suffered after two phases of furious and heavy fighting, these quarters said, have only reappeared in action in the last few days.

Bitter fighting continued and frost, mud and snow are additional causes for casualties.

London observers said Adolf Hitler's high command was still baffled in attempts to find a soft spot in Moscow's defense ring.

"The Germans have struck the defenders at so many spots and found them capable of either warding off the blows or taking punishment that they wonder where to hit next," observers said.

A bulletin from Hitler's field headquarters said German planes had effectively bombed Moscow and Leningrad and was again and that heavy batteries were shelling Leningrad and the harbor at Kronstadt, Soviet island naval base.

Order Utensils Early for Farm

Defense Program Makes Metals Hard to Get

Hempstead county dairy farmers who will need extra milk cans, pails, other steel and tin-plate milk-making equipment in 1942, will do well to place their orders as soon as possible, according to Oliver L. Adams, county agent.

Division of steel to defense needs has made it necessary to restrict civilian use of the metal. Priorities officials, however, realize the importance of milk in the Food-Freedom campaign, and have granted a preference rating to manufacturers of hot-dip tinned and tin-plate dairy equipment.

Only enough steel will be allocated to produce the 1,340,000 milk cans needed for normal replacements and to handle the additional eight billion pounds of milk called for in the Secretary of Agriculture's national agricultural production goals for 1942.

In the case of the rating for tin-plate dairy equipment, only enough steel will be allocated by the office of Production Management to provide an increase of 6.8 per cent in dairy pails, milk-strainer pails, milk kettles, milk strainers, and set-ter or cream cans, says Mr. Adams. Like the extra milk cans, enough of these utensils will be produced to take care of the 6.8 per cent anticipated increase in milk production.

Dairymen of this county who place orders now will be more likely to have them filled early, and will help manufacturers estimate their steel needs. Manufacturers will be required to get the cans to the milk producers before the opening of the milk season next spring.

Plastic Adds Strength to Fur Coats

A fur coat may be ever so becoming but no matter how beautiful the fur it won't wear if the skins are not sturdy and strong. And that important factor is very often given little, if any, thought when the purchase of a coat is being made. Curious too, considering that ladies usually count on more than a season or two for their fur coats. Yet the reason is a simple one in that the strength of the fur lies in the part that isn't seen—the leather.

A large manufacturer of inexpensive coats ($100 and under) has a patented process for strengthening weak skins. A plastic, which liquifies at a high degree of temperature, is used to weld a flannel back onto the leather itself. It is maintained that fur so treated will not split, crack or tear.

An accident is something no one figures on, yet there are hundreds daily. That's why you need accident insurance. Don't go another day without investigating.

FOR THE LOVE OF PETE!

By BURTON BENJAMIN

STEP STOUT, pursued by a team of Stephanie Stevens, who recently has attached herself to him only for his publicity value, star footballer Pete Laird changes from the modest boy his state university teammates and classmates know to a cocky egotist with a chip on his shoulder. The team captain, George Landers, coach Dinty Dugan, college sweet-heart Anne Humphreys, "You're my girl, now," George tells Anne, confessing the love he kept silent until Pete changed. After the Northwestern game he finds a note asking George, with whom he lives, to call Anne. Thinking there is some mistake, Pete goes to Anne's rooming house. He is told by Anne that he isn't fit to even George Landers' boots. Furious, Pete returns to the stadium and picks a fight with Landers, who is injured in the fracas.

THE TEAM PROTESTS

CHAPTER IX

FROWNING, the doctor examined Landers' shoulder. "He'll have to go to the hospital," he said to Laird. "Can't tell whether there's a break until we X-ray. Whatever it is, he won't play football for awhile."

"George, Pete bent over the bed. "George—I'm sorry. Didn't mean to hurt your shoulder. "Shut up," said Landers. "Can the sob stuff. Tell the guys I slipped—tell them something. They're liable to string you up if they find out what happened."

"Fat chance," Laird rubbed his eye. It was already blue. "This shiner's a beaut."

"You've got to make up an alibi," Landers pleaded. "Team's all split up now."

Fortunately, the X-rays showed no break. But there was a bad strain. "It's one of those injuries that may take a long time to heal," announced the doctor.

Dinty Dugan stormed into his office that morning and found Pat Lester leaning back in a chair whittling a pencil with his knife. "I can't figure it out," Dugan said. "How can a guy like that slip . . . ?"

"Seen Laird today?" Lester cut in.

"Don't tell me he's on the loose again."

"Nope," Lester said drily. "But what a mouse he's got under his eye!"

"Well, what's so strange . . . ?"

Dugan stood up. "What's that again?"

"I said he's got a shiner."

"Uh-huh," Dugan plopped limply back in the chair. "Now I see. Slipped against a wall, eh? Yeah—after Laird socked him, didn't he? I bet a couple of women had something to do with it."

"I said he's got a shiner."

"Uh-huh," Dugan plopped limply back in the chair. "Now I see. Slipped against a wall, eh? Yeah—after Laird socked him, didn't he? I bet a couple of women had something to do with it."

"That's what I figure," nodded Lester. "Anne Humphreys for one and Stephanie the Toots for another."

"Well, what's so strange . . . ?"

Dugan stood up. "What's that again?"

"I said he's got a shiner."

"Uh-huh," Dugan plopped limply back in the chair. "Now I see. Slipped against a wall, eh? Yeah—after Laird socked him, didn't he? I bet a couple of women had something to do with it."

"That's what I figure," nodded Lester. "Anne Humphreys for one and Stephanie the Toots for another."

"Well, what's so strange . . . ?"

Dugan stood up. "What's that again?"

"I said he's got a shiner."

"This is murder," groaned Dugan. "Losing Landers is as bad as losing Laird. He's the only guy keeping the team together. I'll have to play young Roskauer. He's smart, but who's going to block?"

"I dunno," said Lester. "Maybe Stephanie's got a sister, we could introduce to Minnesota."

"Cut the comedy," snapped Dugan. "This thing is bigger than you think. I wouldn't be surprised if the team picks this joint."

Dinty Dugan had no idea how close his guess was. At that moment, 15 State players were convening at the Students' Building.

"I'm through," announced Socko Wonsacki. "You can check me out of this deal. Either Laird goes or I do."

"Count me in," said Joey Anderson. "This business about Landers slipping against the wall is a lot of hokum. He slipped just like Billy Conn did against Joe Louis. I'd like to take a shot at Laird myself."

Squad members grunted assent. "We can get along without that guy," continued Wonsacki. "Bill over there—" he pointed to Sheridan, Laird's understudy, "can do just as well. Let's go down and tell Dugan. Either Laird or us. What say?"

Players popped the asked in approval. "Opposed?" asked Wonsacki. No one spoke. "All right," he concluded, "the seniors on the squad will see Dugan today."

They called that afternoon but Dugan was out. He and Lester were visiting Landers at the hospital.

"Hello, coach," greeted Landers as Dugan entered.

"Hello, George," said Dugan. "Hello, Anne, how's the shoulder, kid?" He walked over to the bed.

"Feels better since they strapped it," said Landers. "Sure picked a swell time to get clumsy, didn't it?"

"Forget it, George," Dugan muttered, looking at Lester, then at Anne. "Say—uh—have you seen Pete today?"

"Nope," Landers flushed. "He hasn't been around."

"Wonder where he picked up that shiner," said Dugan quietly. "We haven't done any contact work this week. His knuckles are all scraped too."

Landers looked away and didn't answer. "Why not come clean, George?" said Dugan.

Landers shot a glance at Anne. "Better tell him, George," she gripped his hand. "It's all over campus."

"You've got to make up an alibi," Landers pleaded. "Team's all split up now."

Fortunately, the X-rays showed no break. But there was a bad strain. "It's one of those injuries that may take a long time to heal," announced the doctor.

Dinty Dugan stormed into his office that morning and found Pat Lester leaning back in a chair whittling a pencil with his knife. "I can't figure it out," Dugan said. "How can a guy like that slip . . . ?"

"Seen Laird today?" Lester cut in.

"Don't tell me he's on the loose again."

"Nope," Lester said drily. "But what a mouse he's got under his eye!"

"Well, what's so strange . . . ?"

Dugan stood up. "What's that again?"

"I said he's got a shiner."

"Uh-huh," Dugan plopped limply back in the chair. "Now I see. Slipped against a wall, eh? Yeah—after Laird socked him, didn't he? I bet a couple of women had something to do with it."

"All right," Landers turned to Dugan and told him the story. "I didn't want it to get out, coach," he said. "Team's all busted up now."

"This may be only the beginning," said Dugan.

"I wanted to talk to you about that," said Landers earnestly. "If anyone starts any trouble, send 'em up here to see me, coach. I think I can straighten them out."

"Stay, darlings," whispered Landers.

They stood at the door shifting their feet. "What's the matter?" he grunted. "This isn't a wake. Say something."

"Dugan sent us up here," said Wonsacki uneasily. "It's about Laird."

"Pete?" Landers feigned surprise. "What about him?"

"He's getting a little rich for our blood," said Wonsacki, caustically. "We know how you hurt your shoulder. Either he goes or we do."

"Hold on," Landers said sharply. "You guys are jumping at a lot of conclusions before you hear my side of the story, aren't you?"

"We've heard enough," grunted Wonsacki.

"Have you?" Landers stared at them. "Well, supposing I told you that Laird was right, and I was in the wrong. We were arguing, I stepped offside and he smacked me. I deserved it, didn't I, Anne?"

"Y-yes," Anne Humphreys forced herself to say it. "That's right, fellows. Pete was here this morning, and George apologized."

"Well," said Wonsacki, "if that's the way . . ."

"That's the way," Landers cut in. "I think you guys are barking up the wrong tree. This is a football team, not a debating society. You know what you've got to do—win six more games. Maybe I'll be back for some of them. Maybe not. But that's neither here nor there—your job is to win them. Any objections?"

"Good," Landers grinned. They filed toward the door. "Thanks for dropping in," called Landers as they left.

"George," Anne was standing beside him. "George—that took courage."

She leaned over, put her hand on his cheek and kissed him tenderly.

Arkansas, SMU Series Tied

Records Show That Two Teams Have 7 Wins Each

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. — Fred C. (Tommy) Thomson was playing end for a great Nebraska outfit and Madison (Matty) Bell was helping Centre college win national acclaim when Arkansas and Southern Methodist university began their grid feeding back in 1920.

Come Saturday, at Fayetteville, Thomson's Razorbacks and Bell's Mustangs will supply the thrills and thrills for some 10,000 Homecoming customers in Razorback stadium.

They will go into this game with the record all square between the teams. In 16 previous encounters the Razorbacks have walked off the field seven times the victors, the Mustangs seven times and twice the rivals were unable to reach a verdict.

Arkansas owns the longest winning streak of the series, three straight at the beginning of the rivalry. In the matter of points the Mustangs hold the edge with 156 to 127 for Arkansas.

Only once in this feeding—aside from the draws—has Arkansas been held scoreless. That was last fall when S. M. U. dealt out a 23-0 thrashing in Dallas. On the other hand, Arkansas has blanked the Mustangs no less than seven times. On the "personal" side of the ledger, Thomson and Bell are even at three wins apiece.

The series record:

1920—Arkansas 6; SMU 0.

1921—Arkansas 14; SMU 0.

1922—Arkansas 9; SMU 0.

Legion Auxiliary Members

Attend Little Rock Conference

The principal speakers at the American Legion Auxiliary Conference, held in Little Rock, Wednesday, November 12, were Neil Reed, Blytheville, Department Commander of the American Legion; Mrs. Richard Redwood, Mobile, Ala., National Vice-president, Southern Division. A talk was made by Mrs. David Terry, wife of Congressman Terry, who said that the American Legion Auxiliary should be more conscious of its power—a power which made politicians tremble.

Another speaker mentioned the wonderful library project in the state of Arkansas which was originally sponsored by the American Legion Auxiliary with the result that we now have twenty county libraries, 110 WPA Libraries with a state appropriation of $50,000. Another speaker mentioned the fact that if the American Legion had brought just 50 per cent of the ex-service men into the organization at the time the Universal Draft Bill was presented, the bill would have passed at that time and this country would not be in the shape it is today.

The meeting closed at noon with a novel box-lunch plus hot coffee and "cakes". Another novelty was the attractive corsages worn by several officials made of Armistice Day Poppies. Hope members attending this conference were Mrs. R. C. Ellen, Mrs. Claude Aages, Mrs. E. S. Franklin, Mrs. E. A. Morsani.

Captain J. O. Baker Addresses

D. A. R. Membership

The Chapter unanimously endorsed the candidacy of Mrs. Davis M. Biggs of Proctor for State Regent, Arkansas Society, D. A. R.

Mrs. W. C. Strecker and Mrs. M. G. Thompson were introduced as associate members of John Cain Chapter during their residence in Hope.

Mrs. Martindale, recognizing the Armistice Day season and the importance of National defense, introduced the guest speaker, Captain J. O. Baker, who is attached to the personnel of the Southwest Proving Ground now under construction in Hempstead County.

Captain Baker stated that the name of the project indicated its purpose: that of a proving ground where ordnance materials are to be tested and proved as to their fitness for use by soldiers when in actual combat.

He stated the area roughly occupied a section two and one-half miles wide at its narrowest width, two miles North of Hope; is seventeen miles long and five and one-half miles wide at the Northern limit of the Ground.

A forum was conducted following his discussion when he answered many questions put to him by members of the Chapter.

Youth Needs No Political Lobby

Louise Morley Is Helping NYA Defense Plan

By GERRY DICK
Written for NEA Service
WASHINGTON—Smiling, blue-eyed Louise Morley, 22-year-old daughter of Christopher Morley, is a very serious minded young lady—but she doesn't take herself too seriously. For one thing, the man who wrote "Where the Blue Begins" and "Thunder on the Left" won't let her.

In Washington, as a member of the National Advisory Committee of the National Youth Administration, she tells of the ribbing her father gave her when someone phoned about preliminary arrangements for the conference, and he picked up the phone and announced "Washington calling." He declared that then and there he disclaimed any further civic responsibilities and would expect her to assume them henceforth for the whole family.

At Evelyn Mawr Miss Morley majored in politics, was especially keen about her courses in International Law and Public Administration. She didn't know then just how she would use her textbook knowledge of public affairs, but she felt that young people like herself could help make the world a better place to live in if they knew the rules by which their elders play the game.

She spent her junior year, the year before the war, in Switzerland at the Graduate School in International Studies.

At Bryn Mawr she belonged to community service committees of college girls who worked in settlement houses summer camps for slum children the Hudson Shore Labor School for women factory workers.

Since college, Miss Morley has been Conference Secretary of the International Student Service. Chief function of the organization is educating students for democracy, but interesting them first in their own communities. Since she finds it easier to get students to listen on Saturdays and Sundays when they have no classes, Miss Morley has a seven-day week job.

She first became aware of the other half of the world when she attended public school in New York. She had gone to private school before that, but the family decided all the children should have a year or so in public school.

"When it came time for me to go back to private school, I would not leave," she says. "Public school was too interesting, and I had found out what great good luck I had. I had a room to myself to study at home, an intellectual heritage, all the books I could read, the chance to meet interesting people. And my schoolmates, many of them, had no decent clothes, no money for lunches or carfare. You owe something to the world when you happen to have such good fortune as mine."

Listen to Her Opinions
Miss Morley is one of four young people asked to sit in with NYA officials to give their opinions on what can be done by youth and for youth in the defense effort and the post-war period.

She says: "The young people I know are not discouraged by the world situation. They have a lot more common sense than older people think they have. They want to participate in their national life and their community life and they will if they are given a chance."

In her New York office Miss Morley has a map dotted with thumb tacks wherever defense projects have been located. It is part of her job to interest campus citizens in nearby colleges in the opportunities offered them for study and community service by lack of recreation and decent housing in these defense centers.

Says "I Can't Write"
"We don't need an organized youth pressure group in this country," she thinks. "We only need to make young people who have the advantages of a college education realize they are the natural leaders of the coming generation, and that their citizenship begins in their own neighborhoods."

Occasionally, Miss Morley contributes a piece to the International Student Service magazines. "But," she says, "the editor almost always rewrites my stuff. I can't write worth a cent. But I can talk."

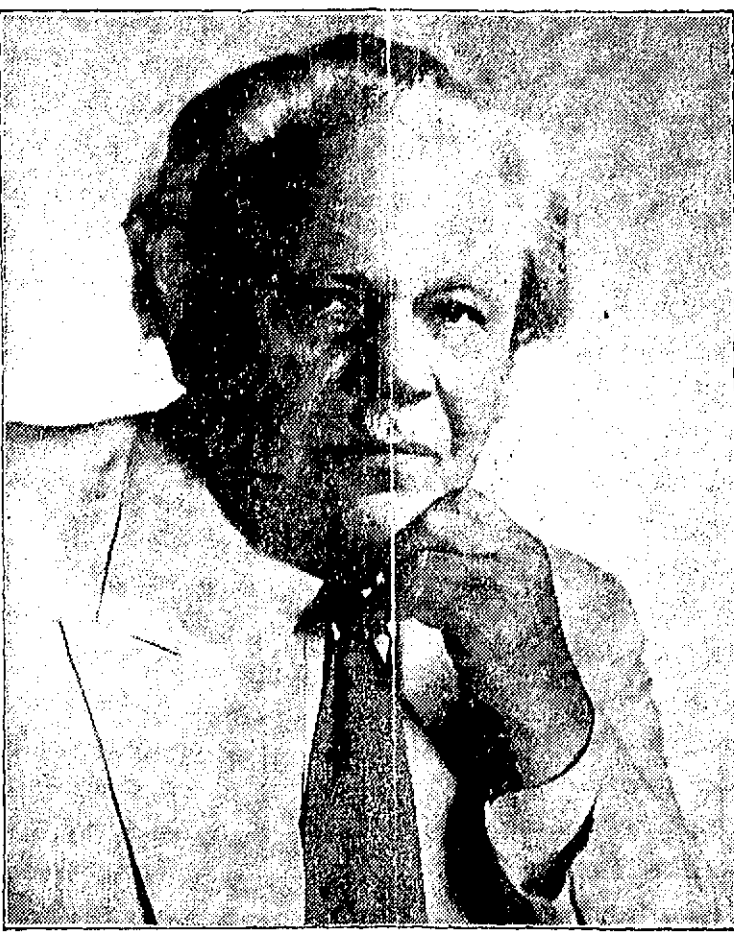

Confident and well informed as Miss Morley is, she thinks a sense of humor is the most important thing in the world. And she doesn't think she knows all the answers.

We, the Women

Hubby Fed Up With Office Affairs? Just Let Him Be Big Boss at Home

By RUTH MILLETT
When a man gets fed up with his

Kryl Symphony Orchestra at Saenger November 25

Bohumir Kryl

Bohumir Kryl, famed conductor who toured America, is known to many millions of people all over the United States and who has toured this country continuously for the past thirty-six years with his fine Symphony Band and who is now on a nation-wide tour with his Symphony Orchestra is the only prominent present day conductor we have known to have a dual liking and talent for both music and sculpturing.

Kryl's Symphony Orchestra of 50 musicians, including featured performers, will appear at the Saenger theater in Hope Tuesday night, November 25, under the auspices of the Friday Music club. It will be a benefit performance for the United Service Organizations.

A frustrated desire to be a great sculptor led Kryl onward into a desire for the higher forms of music and for the formation of a very cultured taste for the arts. As a youth, we find him serving an apprenticeship under Saunders, the noted English sculptor in and around Indianapolis, Ind., where he earned extra dollars by playing his cornet and his violin in the theatre during his spare time. John John Philip Sousa, during his tour in 1906 heard the brilliant playing of Kryl and an offer for an engagement as cornet soloist with his band quickly followed. Kryl, upon receiving this offer left his sculpturing tools lying in the home of General Lew Wallace at Crawfordsville, Ind., where he was engaged at that time with the commission of carving a bust of Ben Hur and the Princess of India.

Thus the lure of traveling upon the road, implanted in his system as a youth of eleven, when he ran away to become a contortionist in the famous boss and decides he is underpaid and under-appreciated, a wife's natural reaction is to tell her husband he is exactly right.

Not only that, women being wild-cats at heart, when any of their loved ones are attacked, the wife is likely to get more riled up over the situation than her husband.

In that state of mind she convinces her husband that he is really the brains of the organization and that it would serve old so-and-so right if he would up and leave him. Then the boss would realize just what he had lost.

There is something admirable in that kind of feminine reaction—but it usually isn't very bright.

It encourages a man either to go on with his job feeling that he is being walked on, or it gets him keyed up enough to throw up the job just to show old so-and-so.

And the man probably can't afford to indulge in either method of nursing his pride.

It might be, and probably is, very important to that family that its head find a more sensible solution to the problem. A woman should control her resentment and help him find it.

Taking Long Range Point of View

First she ought to realize that when two persons don't get along it is seldom the fault of just one of them. So she should try to see if her husband isn't being too touchy, or if he isn't childishly expecting more praise or more credit for what he does than one is likely to get in the business world.

If so, she should gently but firmly make her husband see the situation honestly. It won't draw him as close to her at the moment as would blaming him for everything and calling him names—but it will make for a better solution of his problem in the end.

Even if her calm judgment tells her that the boss is really at fault, a wife should go easy on encouraging resentment against him in her husband's mind.

Maybe the family can't afford for Papa to risk his job at the present moment—or maybe, taking a long range view of the situation, it is important to the man's future that he make the best of an unpleasant situation for a time.

If either of those things is true, a wife should be careful not to increase her husband's discontent, but should say, "Of course, it's a bad situation—but it looks as though for the time being you'll have to put up with it. But we'll do everything in our power to make the time as short as possible."

And then, being a good wife, she will see that her husband's home life is as happy as possible—and that what ever beating his pride takes at work, he'll be allowed to feel like head man around his house.

There Are Two Churchills

Second Winston Retires to Quiet New England Town

By NEA Service

CORNISH, N. H. — Here in this sleepy little New England town, far from headlines and the horrors of the blitz, Winston Churchill is living in quiet retirement. He has been living here, in fact, for many, many years.

He's the "other" Winston Churchill, No. 1 American author of his day. In his first years of this century, when "Richard Carvel," "The Crisis," "Coniston," and "The Inside of the Cup" were best-sellers, he was "the" Winston Churchill to the U. S.

The two Churchills have been confused a number of times in their careers, which, incidentally, paralleled each other at many points. The U. S. Churchill graduated from Annapolis in 1894 and began a writing career. The British, three years younger, graduated from Sandhurst (English West Point) the next year and also began to try his hand at writing. "The Crisis" vs. "The World Crisis"

The American Churchill, an historical novelist, has produced 11 books while the British, historian and one-time war correspondent, 17. The American's "The Crisis," a tale of the Civil War, is often confused with the Englishman's "The World Crisis," a four-volume history of the first World War. Like his English namesake, New England's Churchill has been in politics. He ran for Governor of New Hampshire when in his 30's—"when I was just a youngster," he says.

The Churchills first met in Boston in the 90's. At the turn of the century, when the American's first novel "The Celebrity" was published in England, the present Prime Minister wrote him suggesting that, if both were to continue writing, one or the other had better change his name.

The American answered that since he was the elder (he's now 70 to the other's 67), he didn't feel it should be he. For that reason Winston Churchill of England has always signed himself "Winston S." (for Spencer). Winston Churchill Won't Discuss War

Tall, gaunt, professorish in appearance, the Winston Churchill of New Hampshire seems the antithesis of "Mr. England." But his cultivated, Boston-Brahmin speaking voice is not unlike the other's, and he, too, is hale and hearty despite his more than three-score years.

Winston Churchill doesn't want to talk about the war, although he has written about war many times and is reported to be in complete agreement with the Prime Minister on war policy. He refers questioners to his books—in particular, to "The Uncharted Way," which he published without fanfare last year. Described by him as "an analysis of Christianity and the gospel from a psychological viewpoint," it was his first book in more than 20 years.

But he will say this: "I am a loyal American, and I will follow where the President leads."

The Road to Peace
In his 175-year-old farmhouse, Winston Churchill finds the kind of peace he needs to meditate on another book. It will follow the line of his last. If men would meditate, he feels, if they would realize that "non-contention is not necessarily surrender," if they would realize the "dynamic aspect of the gospel doctrine" and understand that "the really great men of the human species are those who can tell man how to get life" rather than lose it, perhaps all men could find a lasting peace.

Mind Your Manners

Test your knowledge of correct social usage by answering the following questions, then checking against the authoritative answers below:

1. Should a hostess see that there are extra blankets in the guest room?
2. If a woman guest forgets some cosmetic she needs should she tell her hostess or use her hostess' without asking?
3. Is it a good idea for a hostess to have several books and current magazines in a guest room?
4. Should a hostess try to hurry her house guests off to bed when they are still in a conversational or bridge - playing mood?
5. Should a house guest make it clear to his hostess soon after he arrives just when he intends to leave, or is it all right for him to feel that he can decide to go at any time?

What would you do if—
A book which you have not read is being discussed and someone asks what you thought of it—
(a) Say you haven't read it?
(b) Say that you never get time to read?
(c) Pretend that you have read it?

Answers

1. Yes.
2. She should tell her hostess, not just help herself to her hostess' supply.
3. Yes.
4. No.
5. He should let her know when he intends to leave.

Best "What Would You Do" solution—(a), (b) is trite.

Precaution
Before natives would build some of Thailand's (formerly Siam) airports, hunting expeditions had to be organized to kill off tigers from adjoining jungle land.

Answer to Cranium Crackers

1. The wide-spreading pond, the mill by it, the bridge, the rock by the cataract, the orchard, the meadow, the deep tangled wild-wood, the cot, the dairy house, and, of course, the old oaken bucket.
2. The sun shines bright in "My Ol' Kentucky Home."
3. "Mid pleasures and palaces though we may roam, be it ever so humble, there's no place like home." From "Home, Sweet Home."
4. The "Old Folks at Home" are way down upon the Swanee river. It flows in Georgia and Florida.
5. A discouraging word is seldom heard "Home on the Range."

Include Holiday Dishes in Your Meal Plans Also

Budget Plan Does Not Mean You Have to Leave Off Delicious Foods

Too often, digestive upsets, colds, and possibly other ill effects are the result of over-indulging in rich holiday foods, such as nuts, candies, heavy desserts, and rich meats, warns Miss Mary Claude Fletcher, county home demonstration agent.

Planning more simple meals does not necessarily mean eliminating all of the favorite and traditional holiday dishes. With wisely planned food expenditures and healthful foods being stressed from coast to coast and from Canada to the Gulf, it would be more appropriate, and by far more beneficial, to plan more simple holiday meals this year, keeping that same festive spirit.

One way is to go through the list of special holiday dishes, selecting one or maybe two of the more special favorites in your vegetable, dessert or any other course of the meal. The housewife might be governed to some extent by what her own home-produced food supply offers, how plentiful they are on the market, and cost.

A more festive spirit can also be obtained in the way the meal is served, such as a table decoration; meal served in courses; use of the best table cloth, china and silver. Too, genuine hospitality and good cheer are indispensable to really enjoyable meals.

She suggests the following holiday meal menu: Start with half-cup servings of clear soup or bullion, spiced but grape juice, or some other simple appetizer; meat and two vegetables that go with it nicely; one vegetable might be sweet or Irish potatoes, and the other a more succulent one such as beets, turnips, cauliflower or some kind of green vegetable; a crisp salad or a relish tray, including some raw vegetables; pickles, spiced peaches; rolls, butter, and jelly or jam; dessert and coffee.

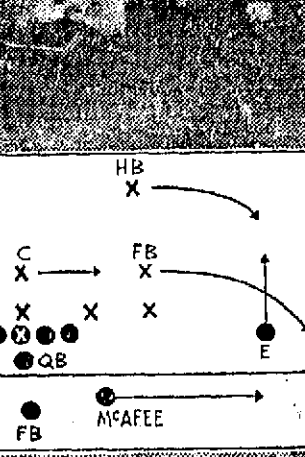

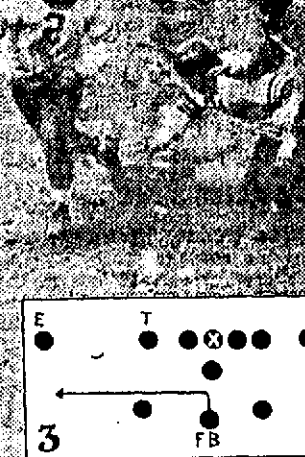

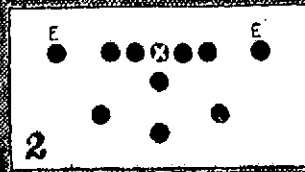

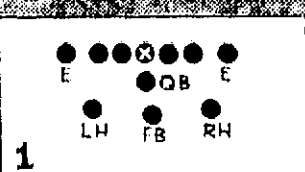

For special emphasis on well-balanced meals for holiday seasons the Home Demonstration Club women will have district meetings over the county where general home demonstration clubs will meet together. The first of these series of meetings will be held at the Marlbrook Community at the home of Mrs. C. R. Willard and the following Home Demonstration Clubs are to meet together: Marlbrook, Sweet Home, Wallaceburg, The Union Grove women are invited to come join the club group and Blevins. The following menus will be prepared and demonstrated for the evening meeting. The food will be furnished by club groups. Over baked meat, chicken and cornbread dressing, scalloped egg plant, fruit salad, cooked dressing, whole wheat muffins and Christmas Dessert.

A Pressure Cooker meal: Chicken and brown rice, turnip greens, sweet potatoes, spoon bread and a cheap Christmas cake.

Extra dishes to be prepared for holiday meals: baked beans, hot tomato pie, peanut brittle, coffee cake, Christmas salad and persimmon cake. The afternoon program will be devoted to handicraft and ideas for Christmas gifts under the supervision of Miss Harris, assistant home demonstration agent. The meeting will start at 9:00 a. m.

The second schedule for the month will be Tuesday, the 25, in Columbus Community at the home of Mrs. L. K. Bayce. Clubs to take part in this program will be Columbus, Old Liberty, Bright Star, South H. Ozan-St. Paul, Washington, Antioch and any soldier called in the Mounties, who soon identified him as Lorentz. Incidentally, the kind-hearted motorist, sympathetic with Norway, had loaned the alleged Norwegian $2.50 to help him on his way.

Hans Kibart, another fugitive, was captured by Mother Nature. The Canadian woods were too much for him and when poison ivy reached out and marked him as he passed there was nothing for him to do but give up.

Though some of the guards are veterans of Germany's World War I prison camps, they didn't expect that two prisoners would crawl under an army truck and "ride the rods" when the truck left the camp. The Germans, however, made the mistake of hitch-hiking with a newspaper, reported, who drove them to the nearest police detachment.

Canada's geography defeats most of the fugitives. One of them named Von Werra got across the American boundary. While Washington decided what should be done about him, the German consular authorities in the United States put up a bond of $5000. It proved the usual German scrap of paper. Von Werra ducked southward to South America and eventually made his way back to Germany.

The United States treasury was $5,000 the richer for his passing, but decided that if German representatives in the U. S. couldn't keep faith better than that, any further captives getting into American territory would be turned back to Canada as having entered the U. S. illegally. And that is what happens now.

German officers, particularly the spoiled brats of the Luftwaffe, are sometimes pretty uppity, but it does other communities wishing to take part in these programs are cordially invited to attend. The other schedules will be the first two weeks of December and these announcements will be made later.

not get them anywhere. The Veterans Guard is pretty tolerant, but they have the discipline of old soldiers.

No matter what the prisoner does, there is no slugging, no physical violence. Any offender is arrested and given proper military trial. If his offense is serious, the Protecting Power is there at the trial. He may be allowed counsel or "Prisoner's Friend"; in fact the same routine is followed as if he were an officer or other rank of the Canadian forces.

Identity Is Secret The identity of the prisoners held in Canada is a guarded secret. There are some pretty eminent Germans among them, including Navy, Army, and Luftwaffe senior and staff officers. They were taken prisoner by the British in the fighting in England and the Low Countries.

after parachuting or being shot down and all over the seven seas where the British Navy and Coast Patrols have hunted down their submarines. The prisoners, other than officers, are set to work on civilian projects, for under the Geneva convention, no prisoner can be forced to work on anything pertaining to the war. They must be paid for their work. In Canada this pay is 20 cents a day, which is the same sum paid to Canada's unemployed in work camps during the peace-time depression.

Officers are not required to work. They get their pay from Germany. They may also do part-time work in various ways for the good of the camp. In one camp they designed and carried out a fine playing field. Officers are not quartered with the men but have separate camps.

The prisoners are given every privacy. No person is allowed to visit the prison camp except on definite business. The locations of the camps are kept secret. A ban has even been placed on any but official photographs of the prisoners or the prison camps. Canadians even protest that the prisoners are too well treated. But behind everything is the fate of the British prisoners in Germany. So long as Germany treats British prisoners decently and well, German prisoners in Canada will get the same good treatment. It isn't that the Veterans Guard loves the German prisoners more, but they remember the British in Germany and act accordingly.

In fact being a prisoner of war in Canada is about the safest job for an soldier, sailor or airman. Even their own people cannot drop bombs on them by mistake.

tum will be reserved for negroes. This meeting will be a part of the Hempstead County Defense Program and every citizen of the county is invited to attend. Ched Hall, Chairman of the Safety Committee of the Chamber of Commerce, will preside at the meeting and present the certificates of award to the plants which have had a perfect safety record.

The Hope Industrial Safety Council met at the Chamber of Commerce office, Tuesday of this week, and the following safety reports were submitted from the six participating plants:

Hope Basket Company, 44,160 hours worked, 4 accidents, 243 hours lost. Empire Cotton Oil Co., 13,194 hours worked, 1 accident, 122 hours lost. Bruner Ivory Handle Co., 24,534 hours worked, 2 accidents, 187 hours lost.

Gunter Lumber Company, 27,420 hours worked, 2 accidents, 212 hours lost.

Hope Heading Company, 8,822 hours worked, 2 accidents, 57 hours lost. Union Compress & Warehouse Company, 6,871 hours worked, no accidents and no hours lost.

The total of these figures show that 125,041 hours were worked, with only 11 accidents totaling 891 hours lost. This report shows two less accidents and 276 less man-hours lost in October than in September.

Junior Red Cross Drive

Youngsters Also to Have Part in Annual Drive

The Junior Red Cross this year will make its contribution along with the adult drive. This means that each room in the entire school will be enrolled in the Junior Red Cross program. Each room contributes as much as a dollar. All other funds are used to purchase supplies for projects, which may be national, state, or local. Already calls have come for a production program which means that our own Hempstead County Junior Red Cross is asked to help produce slawds, woolen dresses, boys shirts, and girls cotton dresses, etc.

The call for miscellaneous articles requested by Camp Joseph T. Robinson is as follows: 125 bean bags, 4 bean bag boards, 2 chess sets, 6 small tables with checker board top, 12 soft hand balls, 200 reading racks, 2500 decorated paper napkins, 100 score pads, 3000 ash trays of metal, 48 holders for desk plotters, 100 stories made in booklets, 100 short stories and serials, 50 window wreaths, 50 Christmas greens.

Funds over and above your enrollment fee will be turned into the Junior Red Cross account for the school which collected it and this money spent to buy supplies which can be made into such items as requested above. Schools, join your Junior Red Cross and let's join the "Army" in making possible the American way of life possible.

Electric Line to SPG Project

Southwestern Granted Permission to Build Line

LITTLE ROCK—(AP)—The Utilities commission Thursday authorized the Southwestern Gas and Electric company to construct a 23,000 volt electric power line from Okay to the Southwestern Proving Ground near Hope. The commission order said the City of Hope waived objections to construction of the circuit which will cost approximately $70,866.

Notes From the Proving Ground

Workers Contribute $1,784 to Red Cross Drive

Major Werner C. Strecker, Constructing Quartermaster, Southwestern Proving Ground, has turned over to local Red Cross Roll Call Chairman, $1,784.65 which represented the voluntary contribution of employees on this defense project for the membership drive to date and more than doubled in amount the sum set as a quota for the job.

Many departments of the project went 100 per cent on the first day of the drive. One Roll Call Chairman, acceptance of the money for the Red Cross, stated, "Often the work on drives of this type is a hard and thankless task but this splendid response from a group who, for the most part do not consider this to be their regular home is heartening. Work on this roll call has been the most pleasant I ever experienced, we particularly feel indebted to Major Strecker for his cooperation."

The details of the membership drive at the project are handled by H. L. Lennstrom, for the contracting firm of W. B. Callahan Construction Company; Miss Helen Mavry, for the Architect Engineering firm of Howard, Needles, Tammen and Bergendoff; Mrs. Alma Campbell for the Constructing Quartermaster's Office and Mrs. Harry R. Fritzsche for the Ordnance Department.

While considerable work remains to be done before the port is finished, enough of the construction is completed to indicate final form and aviation engineers and flyers familiar with the local facility say the field, when finished, will be one of the largest and best equipped military airports in the United States.

Besides ample taxi ramps leading from the huge hangar, the airport has three runways any one of which contains far more landing space than is provided by the average municipal field. The idea of three runways is to provide for the landing and launching of any size army aircraft regardless of wind direction.

Principal use of the airport will be in connection with ordnance testing work at the project. However, the facility could be easily used for many other military needs should the occasion arise.

The airport will have eight buildings, including hangar, barracks, repair shop, central heating plant and other needed facilities. Rapid drainage for the field is provided by a system using corrugated pipe of varying size. There will be an underground fuel system to include equipment for refueling of several ships at a time. As is true in all army construction the fuel supply facility is so arranged that it may be enlarged if necessary.

The airport will be connected with highways numbers four and twenty-nine and served by the project railroad system. The heating of this field, a major item in construction, will be an outstanding feature, according to illumination engineers now installing the system.

Tabernacle Meet to Close

Final Service to Be Conducted Sunday Night

The revival meeting at the Hope Gospel Tabernacle, being conducted by Evangelist Bernice Vandermere will close on Sunday night, the Rev. J. E. Hamill announced Thursday. Special services have been arranged for the closing days of the meeting; Thursday night the Andrews quartet will sing special selections, as well as play a musical number. On Friday night the Rev. Stephen Vandermere will be a guest in the service, and will join Mrs. Vandermere in singing. Receiving much favorable comment in the meeting is the congregational singing led by F. L. Williamson, and the special singing also led by Mr. and Mrs. Williamson.

Stressing again the importance of seeking "first the kingdom of God" in these days of more or less prosperity, the evangelist Wednesday night spoke on, "What will it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his soul?" Mrs. Vandermere pled with her audience not to neglect their spiritual needs in this time of desperate preparation for war. "If ever in our lives, and in the history of our country we needed to seek after the True God it is today," she said.

Services begin every night at 7:30, except Saturday night, when there will be no service. Mrs. Vandermere will speak in both the morning and evening service on Sunday. Pastor Hamill said that plans were being laid for a great climax Sunday to the two weeks meeting.

Landscaping Farm Doesn't Mean Spending

Many Yards Are Improved by Cuttings From Neighbors

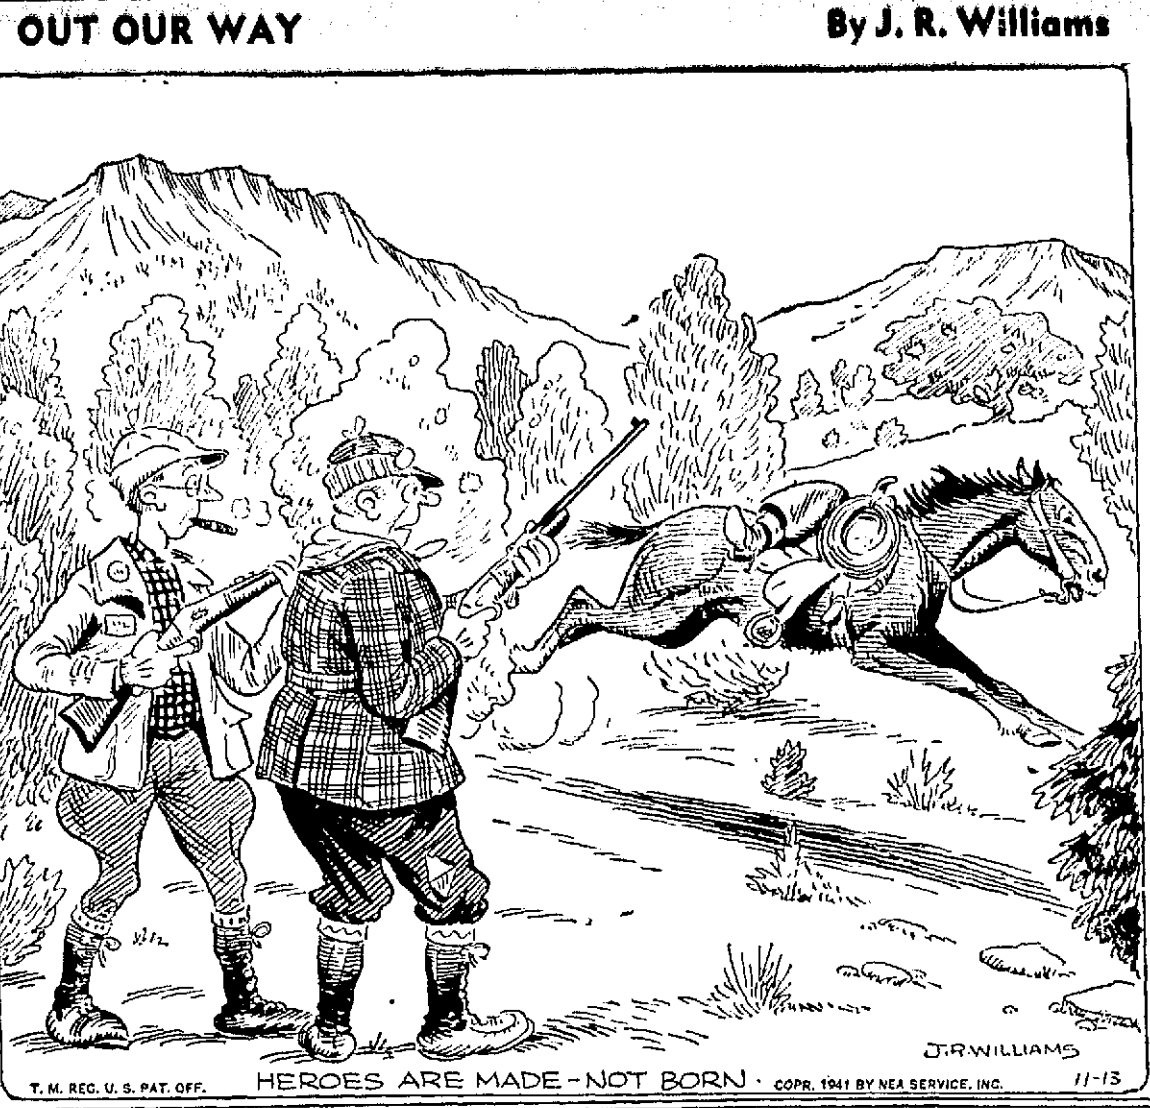

To attractively landscape the farm does not necessarily mean spending farm family dollars, which must be saved and conserved for other things that family members must have to buy during this period of rising prices, says Miss Mary Claude Fletcher, county home demonstration agent.

Many farm homes in this county have been attractively landscaped with shrubs grown from cuttings made by the farm housewife or some other member of the family.

Cuttings may be started in the spring, summer or winter. The simplest method is to take the cutting in the winter, about 10 days after leaf shedding and until buds start to swell in the spring.

The method of taking hardwood winter cuttings applies to the shrubs that lose their leaves during winter. Young wood is selected, preferably wood that produced last summer, although 2-year-old wood will often make good cuttings. The cuttings are made from 4 to 8 inches in length and include at least three buds. The cuttings of each particular type of shrub are tied together in bunches with the large ends of the cuttings at one end of the bundle. The bundles are then stored through the winter by placing them in a box or basket of moist sand or moss placed in a cool, moist storage cellar. Bundles may be stored in open ground, buried to a depth of 8 to 12 inches, layed on the sides and planted with large ends somewhat higher than the small ends.

The cuttings are kept moist but not wet throughout the storage season. As soon as the ground warms up in the spring, they should be placed in a row in the garden or nursery plot, spacing them 4 to 6 inches apart in

War Will End in 1951 — Expert of 1550

WASHINGTON — Maybe what this country needs to get everybody hipped on the war is, instead of an Office of Facts and Figures which the President set up a couple of weeks ago, an Office of Fun and Frolic.

So far, all has been too, too serious. Aside from a few good cracks by Senator Connally and a really good speech by Senator Vandenberg, the debate and revision of the neutrality act has been so dull and heavy that if any of the orators were accidentally dropped on the foot, every bone would be broken from the Achilles tendon to the great toe.

If a Ministry of Fun and Frolic were to be set up, this department, with tongue wadded in cheek, would like to suggest that the "Mein Kampf" for propagandizing the faith of frolicsomeness should be the prophecies of Nostradamus. Maybe you're already up on this cult, but it was only last Sunday that the Washington, D. C. supporters of the Free French hired themselves a hall and held a benefit meeting during the course of which a man made a speech telling how this Nostradamus, way back about 1550, prophesied the rise and fall of the League of Nations, the coming of Hitler and Mussolini, the building and capture of the Maginot line, the emergence of Petain, the part a second A. E. F. would play, and—no kidding—the rise of the du Pont family as makers of munitions that would save the world.

The meeting must have been a success, for the benefit raised $113.50 to buy wool to be knitted into things that could be sent to the Free French soldiers in Africa. What particularly interested the Free French supporters in Washington, however, was the revelation that Nostradamus had also predicted the coming of General Charles de Gaulle.

Against a background of potted palms and oak leaves dipped in henna dye, the speaker stood at a rostrum over which fell the tri-color in graceful folds with the Stars and Stripes on the left and the Union Jack on the right. He told how Nostradamus said it was all going to end. To let you in on the secret without further ado, the end isn't going to come till June, 1951, but when you consider that a doctor of medicine could write cryptic verses which would predict these things 400 years ago, you have to admit he was pretty good. The country needs more men like this in government.

Nostradamus wrote his stuff in quatrains. He was a mystic sage, as well as a doctor. His real name was Michel de Notre Dame, from whence Nostradamus, from his father, he had inherited certain cryptic Egyptian words and these, with his natural born clairvoyance and a few hypnotic drugs, enabled him to write these verses.

Much that Nostradamus wrote is still unintelligible. He used puns and anagrams. PARIS he called SIRAP. HITLER he calls HISTER. It's permissible to change one letter in an anagram, like cheating at solitaire, but Nostradamus got the word HISTER honestly. The old name of the Danube was the Hister, and that also went for a man of the Danube country. Hence Hitler. The du Pont family comes into it through reference to "material du pont" which would be brought from the land of the farthest west. Aeroplanes were easy for him to predict as "mechanisms of flying fire." If more of these things could be figured out, a lot more of Nostradamus would be made clear.

Enter De Gaulle

But old Nostradamus must have been pretty smart at that, for, according to his interpreters, a free French translation of what he wrote figures out like this:

The eastern wall (Maginot line) will be conquered by shining metal (gold and fifth column bribery), and the enemy shall be at the gates of Sirap (Paris) in seven days. He who is empty and vain (Mussolini) will come to rule a land, raising a force in a march from Milan (Fascist march on Rome). But the red policy shall prevail (Communist revolution). After the Republic shall be seen no more (fall of France) there shall be an aged leader (Petain) But the coming of an unsubdued leader is heralded (that's de Gaulle) who shall not succumb to the invader He will be established in Africa, come to Italy, cross the Alps and drive the invaders (Germany) back to their land. The red (Communism) will spread to the republic (France) but—hold on to your hats, boys—in June 1951, a Bourbon prince will be crowned Henry the Fifth and peace will reign after a force from the land of the farthest west (second A. E. F.) lands at Chalons and fight a battle at Blois. That's what the man said, anyway.

point of view it's not what he gave up for her that matters, but what she gave up for him. For by marrying the Duke of Windsor she has lost the privileges of private life. No matter where they go, she is committed along with him to a goldfish life, where every act is subjected to public scrutiny and criticism. She cannot even buy a hat without precipitating a public controversy over whether she paid too much or too little for it.

If she bought her clothes in bargain basements, you can be sure the public would say, "How stingy, with all the money she must have. She's setting a bad example to other rich women. Doesn't she realize her obligation to support the finest designers of hats and gowns?"

But if she pays top prices the public, or a carping portion of it, objects, "Look at her throwing away money, and here they ask me to give to British war relief!"

The Duke demands for her the utmost respect. Many people address her as "Your Royal Highness," because they believe the Duke wants them to. Legally of course she is not entitled to the "Royal" designation, and it is said to be a sore point with Edward that the British cabinet refused to raise her to the rank of royalty.

Once a letter asking a gift for a benefit party was sent to "Her Highness." There was no reply. A second letter, addressed to "Her Royal Highness," got a prompt and favorable answer. He showers her with gifts of precious jewelry, and people say he wants her to be as jeweled as if she were indeed the Queen of England.

But it isn't a one-sided love affair. The Duchess seems devoted to Edward. Her attitude is playful, and flirtatious, but completely kind.

"Where is the Duke? Have I lost him?" she asked at a crowded party. "The case of the disappearing Duke. Ah, there you are, darling."

Once again when she asked for him, someone told her he was surrounded by men. "Then he should be safe enough," she said.

A friend who knows them both well summed up the case for this greatest romance of all time. He said, "They're nuts about each other. You can just tell."

Windsors Are Still in Love

Says Amy Porter, AP Feature Writer, After Interview

By AMY PORTER
AP Feature Service
NEW YORK—When the Duke and Duchess of Windsor go out separately of an afternoon, the Duchess rides in the Windsors' number one, air-conditioned limousine, with the royal insignia on the door, while the Duke takes the number two car minus air-conditioning.

With the Duchess goes Sgt. Harry Holder, the man Scotland Yard sent over from England to guard the person of the Duke, while his royal highness goes out unguarded, or with only such guards as are available wherever he happens to be.

This state of affairs is only one of the many indications that the former Wallis Warfield is still "the woman I love" to the man who gave up a throne five years ago in order to marry her.
